

✓ COMMUNICATION SKILLS

The subject of communication has remained the concern of scholars since the time of ancient Greece. Communication is the most frequently discussed topic in education, but it is seldom clearly understood. In practice, effective communication is an essential prerequisite to attain educational objectives. Human beings communicate through speech and gestures, whereas animals, birds, insects and even plants communicate through sounds, sense organs and movements.

WHAT IS COMMUNICATION?

The word "Communication is derived from the Latin word 'Communis,' which means to make common, transmit, to impart, or share between two or more persons or groups." Communication means to inform, to tell, to show, or to spread information. Thus, it is a two-way process of exchanging ideas or information between human beings.

Communication is the natural aspect of man's life. Communication is as old as humans. Human beings themselves start communicating from birth. When a baby cries, he is speaking; he needs attention or milk. When he gurgles, he expresses his sense of satisfaction.

Man has always tried to share his thoughts, experiences and feelings with others.

We achieve our goals according to our ability to communicate effectively.

Communication is the basis of all socio-economic, political and cultural activities.

There can be no society without communication.

DEFINITIONS OF COMMUNICATION

- According to Keith Davis:

"Communication is the transfer of information and understanding from one person to another person. It is a way of reaching others with facts, ideas, thoughts and values."

- According to George Terry:

"Communication is an exchange of facts, ideas, opinions, or emotions by two or more persons."

- According to Smith Baker:

"Communication is a process of sharing or giving information. It is the way to convey the message from one person to another person or from one place to another place."

- Oxford Dictionary:

The Oxford Dictionary defines communication as "the action of conveying or exchanging information and ideas."

- According to Harold Janis:

"We define communication as the process by which message affects response."

- Mr Herta A. Murphy and others:

"Communication is a process of transmitting and receiving verbal and non-verbal messages."

Communication is the way to convey the message from one person to another person

- Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary:

Communication is "a process by which information is exchanged between individuals through a common system of symbols, sign or behaviour; also a technique for expressing ideas effectively in a speech."

- The American Heritage Dictionary:

Communication is the art and technique of using words effectively to impart information or ideas. This definition is a good starting point because even though communications might involve images.

- According to W.H. Newman and C.F. Sumer Jr.:

"Communication is an exchange of facts, ideas, opinions or emotions by two or more persons."

- According to Keith Davis:

"Communication is the process of passing information and understanding from one person to another."

- According to Peter Little:

Communication is the process by which information is transmitted between individuals or organizations so that an understanding response results.

EXPLANATION

It is a process.

It is an information transmitted between individuals and organizations,

It ensures an understanding response from the receiver of the communication.

- According to Koontz and O' Donnell:

"Communication is an exchange of facts, ideas, opinions or emotions by two or more people." This definition may be explained as: it is a two-way activity. There are a communicator and the receiver of communication. Exchange implies reception and response from the receiver to ideas, emotions and opinions of the communicator.

Communication is a process in which people share information, ideas and feeling. It involves the spoken or written words and body language, personal mannerism, and style, anything that adds meaning to a message. The dictionaries say that communication is the transmission of a statement or information by speaking or writing. Another dictionary declares that communication is giving or exchanging information, signals, messages by talk or gestures or writing. Yet another definition says that communication is social intercourse. Communication is all this and much more. A good description should give precise meaning and throw light on the scope of the word/expression.

CONCLUSION

Communication is giving, receiving or exchanging ideas, information, signals or messages through appropriate media, enabling individuals or groups to persuade, to seek information, to give information or to express emotions.

✓ WHAT IS TECHNICAL COMMUNICATION?

Technical communication is communication when professionals discuss a topic with a definite purpose with a well-defined audience. These are objectives of technical communication:

- To provide planned information
- To invite company for joint business enterprise
- To spread knowledge in oral or written form.

Technical communication must be accurate, correct, precise, suitable and to the point. The right information is objective. In technical communication, the language must be clear and easy to understand. It is the most vital mean by which professionals connect to different organizations. These professions communicate with each other, exchanging organized information making decisions, talking about new ideas, plans, proposals etc. They also have to share externally with foreign professionals and people from other countries. This kind of communication takes place in oral or written form.

CHARACTERISTICS

- It contains a technical message
- Follows a set pattern
- Always for a specific audience
- Mostly formal
- Both oral or written
- Frequently involves technical vocabulary (jargon), graphics, etc.

Technical communication provides planned information. Thus, messages about technical, industrial and business matters belong to the category of technical communication.

PROCESS OF COMMUNICATION

Communication is the process of sending and receiving a message that produces a response. In other words, it is a two-way process of exchanging ideas or information. The method of communication is considered adequate when it achieves the desired response from the receiver.

There can be three stages of the process of communication.

① INCOMPLETE COMMUNICATION

In this diagram, according to O. Donnell, the communication process has been completed. However, most of the experts stress that there must be a response. It is why it is called incomplete or ineffective communication.

② COMPLETE COMMUNICATION

In this style of communication, the sender also receives a response or feedback. It is called complete communication.

③ DEFECTIVE COMMUNICATION

Sometimes there is some noise in the communication process. Therefore, the receiver does not receive an accurate message. It is called defective or disturbed communication.

THE COMPONENTS OF COMMUNICATION

Communication is a two-way process in which two persons or groups exchange ideas and information. It is a process of transmitting and receiving verbal and nonverbal messages. Communication is adequate when it achieves the desired reaction or response from the receiver. Communication is a two-way process of exchanging ideas or information.

The communication process has six components that take place when we communicate. They are context, sender/encoder, message, medium, receiver/decoder, feedback.

1 CONTEXT —————

PERSPECTIVE

Every person has a different context. It may be his background of language, country, field, culture, religion, organization, institution, and information level.

INTERNAL STIMULI

In the second phase, we can discuss the internal stimuli of a person receiving a message or feeling the effect of an external message. The emotion, opinion, attitude, experiences, education, liking and disliking, social status, and other person's influence is communication and analysis of the message. It plays a vital role to understand and submit the letter effectively.

EXTERNAL STIMULI

External stimulus is a source of the message. It can be a letter, note, telegram, fax, e-mail, telephone call and verbal or written statement that take a vital part to understand and communicate the message. It is an integral part of the context.

2 SENDER / ENCODER — بفرستنده

The speaker, writer or encoder of the message is the sender or source. The person who sends the message initiates the process of communication. When you send a message, you are the "encoder," the writer or speaker, depending on whether your letter is written or oral. You try to choose symbols—usually words (and sometimes also graphics or pictures) that express your message so that the receiver(s) will understand it and react with the response you desire. The sender must prepare the statement to receive it with the same spirit and the same meaning as intended by the sender. It should draft the text that achieves the result desired by the sender.

3 MESSAGE — خبر، پیام

The message is based on that idea, feelings, or content you want to send or share with another person. When we speak, speech is the message. When we write, writing is the message. When we gesture, the movements of our arms and the expressions of our faces are the message. The sender should decide accurately what his message is. The sender must keep in mind the party to whom the message. It intends to convey and the channel to be used. It can be consisting of verbal or non-verbal or symbols or another form. The statement may be oral or written. The sender must be clear about this message and the actual contents of it. The message will be clear and understandable to the receiver. The qualities of the excellent statement are known as 7C's written by Herta A. Murphy, are as under:

- Completeness
- Conciseness
- Consideration
- Concreteness
- Clarity
- Courtesy
- Correctness

4 MEDIUM — ذریعہ وسیلہ

Medium means the channel used to send the message. It is a route travelled by message. It can be written, printed, oral, electronic, mail, telephone, Internet or any other. It influences the relationship between the sender or receiver or the importance of the message. If the medium is oral, the feedback is immediate; if written, the input delays. We use the written or verbal channel. We need a message, and it changes according to the distance and inside or outside the institution.

We normally choose oral or written mediums because of their following characteristics:

5 ORAL COMMUNICATION — زبانی ابلاغ

Non-written communication is known as oral communication. Speaking, delivering a lecture, reading, interview and listening etc., are some of the forms of oral communication. The sentence structures of verbal communication are simple. This medium uses shorter words and shorter sentences. It brings prompt feedback.

Inside your organization: It may take the form of a staff meeting, reports, face to face discussions, audiotapes, telephone chats etc.

Outside your organization: It may be face to face discussions, telephone, or presentations etc.

CHARACTERISTICS

- Immediate feedback
- Shorter sentences
- Conversational
- Prompt action

④ WRITTEN COMMUNICATION — تحریراتی مواصلات

The written channel is often preferred when the message is long, technical, or formal and needs to be black and white. It is best for a permanent record. This medium uses longer words and longer sentences. It brings delayed feedback.

Inside your organization:

For internal communication, written media may be memos, reports, bulletins, posters, notes, job descriptions.

Outside your organization:

External written communication media may be letters, reports, telegrams, faxes, telexes, brochures, news releases etc.

CHARACTERISTICS

- Delayed feedback
- Longer sentences, longer words
- More formal
- Delayed action
- More detailed technical information

⑤ RECEIVER / DECODER — وصول کنندہ

The receiver is the destination of the message. The receiver of the message is the listener or reader, also known as the decoder. The receiver can receive a message through the eyes, ears, non-verbal touch, taste, smell, etc. When a message is received, the receiver assigns a certain meaning to it. It is called decoding. There are also some communication barriers between the sender and the receiver. These are influenced by attitudes, opinions, skills, cultural customs etc. We do not all undergo similar experiences with the subject or the symbols that the sender has chosen. Even within the United States, attitudes, abilities, opinions, communication skills, and cultural customs vary. The receiver receives the message effectively when his perception level is closer to the sender. While drafting a statement, the sender should consider all those factors to minimize the possibilities of it being misinterpreted or misunderstood.

⑥ FEEDBACK — جواب

Feedback is the response based on the sender's message received by the receiver. In other words, we can say it is the reaction of the receiver. It can be a verbal or written message, an action, or simply silence. It can also be an action, such as receiving in the mail an item you ordered. Sometimes silence is used as feedback, though it is almost always ineffective. The sender needs feedback to determine the success or failure of communication. A context exists in which a sender chooses a message to communicate; the sender must also determine the message's medium. A receiver decodes the message and provides feedback. The feedback shows the communication process's effectiveness and the endpoint of another communication cycle's message and start point. We can deliver this process in the figure below:

LEVELS OF COMMUNICATION

Human communication takes place at various levels. There are six important levels of communication. These are as follows:

- Intra-personal communication
- Inter-personal communication
- Small group or micro communication
- Large group or public communication
- Mass communication
- Other types

1 INTRA-PERSONAL COMMUNICATION

Self-1 $\longleftrightarrow$ Self-1

This type of communication occurs within one's self. It takes place within an individual. This type can learn personal thoughts, feelings, ideas, reasoning, analysing, self-awareness, problem-solving, self-control, managing interpersonal communication, and responding on any matter. This type of communication is started from the self. Oneself is both sender and receiver as well. Thoughts and feelings are messages, the brain is a channel and personal talk is feedback. We can say that intra-personal communication is with oneself and this kind of communication expresses the formulation of one's personality. A teacher thinks and then presents his ideas to his students and the class.

2 INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

Self-1 $\longleftrightarrow$ Self-2

Interpersonal communication takes place primarily between two persons or more than two. It is called one to one or face to face communication. Thus, contact at this level refers to the sharing of information among people. Usually, it is informal and unstructured. In interpersonal communication, all communication elements are involved and the process is completed, for example, communication between teacher and student. Interpersonal communication can be formal or informal.

For example, your communication with the shopkeeper is different from that with your friends and family members. It involves:

- Background knowledge and experience used to the conversation
- Teacher as a sender
- Student as a receiver
- The message consists of verbal and non-verbal symbols
- Sight and sound used for channel
- Feedback is a student's response
- Here the position of sender and receiver is changed.
- Initiate feedback and fewer barriers

It is informal and comfortable communication. It uses to discover, relate, influence, play, help, develop and maintain effective relationships and problem-solving skills. Interpersonal communication vastly uses in classrooms.

③ SMALL GROUP COMMUNICATION

It is a type of communication needed when a small number of people meet to solve problems, share knowledge, develop ideas, and share experiences. In small group communication, every member has a chance to interact with others. This process is complicated than interpersonal communication because there are some chances of confusion as a small group meeting has a specific purpose, so it must be evident. Its channel is like personal communication and feedback is immediate. We can say, small group communication is interpersonal communication. This kind of communication is used for sharing information, ideas, experiences. It generates new thoughts and problem-solving effectiveness, improving leadership abilities for a specific purpose. In the classroom, this kind of communication is used widely. This small group communication is mainly used in the classroom, round table conferences and meeting interviews.

④ PUBLIC COMMUNICATION / LARGE GROUP COMMUNICATION

This kind of communication is used to change attitudes, opinions, values, purposeful sharing of others, raise people's morale, and provide entertainment. It can also use for educational purposes. In public communication, 'the sender sends a message in the shape of speech to the audience or students. The message is clear and structured. The channel is like the interpersonal and small group, but feedback is different and limited. Examples of this kind of communication are headteacher speech in the morning assembly, the address of a political and religious leader and providing entertainment.

⑤ MASS COMMUNICATION

It is a communication of large scale. The audience is in millions. Many devices, expertise and channels are used to send the message. These are called media. The media has two kinds, electronic and print. In mass communication, feedback is very slow or little and delayed between 'sender' and the 'receiver.' The channels or medium are radio, TV, videocassettes, newspapers, film, Internet etc. Its purpose is orientation and information.

⑥ OTHERS

Other kinds of communication:

- ① Inter-cultural cultural communication
- ② Ethical communication

TYPES OF COMMUNICATION

There are two types of communication

- ① Verbal Communication
- ② Non-verbal Communication

1) VERBAL COMMUNICATION — تواصل لفظي in form of written and spoken

The communication which takes place in the form of words is called verbal communication. The primary medium of this kind is an oral presentation of ideas, feelings and information to another person with language. Thus, it refers to the use of sounds and language to relay a message. It serves as a vehicle for expressing desires, ideas and concepts.

SPOKEN AND WRITTEN COMMUNICATION

Let us see the fundamental difference between spoken and written communication; whether you communicate in writing will depend on the circumstances and extent of the person you are addressing. There are many reasons for communicating orally and communicating in writing, as well. Both have some advantages and disadvantages.

ORAL COMMUNICATION

- It is the fastest form of communication.
- It saves time and money.
- It is a more effective communication system.
- Gestures, tones and facial expressions make it more effective.
- It allows immediate feedback from the audience.
- The success of communication can measure rapidly and conveniently.
- It helps in improving the motivation of people.
- It is beneficial in case of an emergency or any other calamity.

DEMERITS

- It has a documentary, as this communication has a purely temporary impact.
- Where a lengthy message is required, oral communication is not suitable.
- Serious thought is not possible as a receiver has to make a rapid decision.
- In it, there is no time to think and act thoughtfully.
- There is every possibility that spoken words do not hear or understand.
- Sometimes oral communication is time-consuming in meetings and conferences.

WRITTEN COMMUNICATION

- The written communication process has the quality of getting stored for future reference.
- When the receiver and sender are at distant points, this type is the only means.
- Written communication gives more time to the receiver for a response.
- It provides enough time for to receiver to think about a specific action.

- Written communication is more orderly.
- Written communication provides correct and accurate information.

DISADVANTAGES

- This kind of communication is very time-consuming.
- It takes time in preparing the message and also understanding it.
- It cannot be communicated as quickly as oral communication.
- The feedback is not immediate but delayed.
- Everything cannot be put into writing.
- Written documents become devices of extreme legalism which cause disputes.
- Written communication cannot remain confidential

2NON-VERBAL COMMUNICATION65% more efficient*

Communication without words is called nonverbal communication. Non-verbal communication includes body movements, the tone or emphasis on words during oral communication, facial expressions and the physical distance between the sender and receiver. In some instances, the non-verbal component is more dominant. For example, a glance, a stare, a smile and a body movement all convey meaning. Ray Birdwhistle, a very famous anthropologist, estimates that the nonverbal element accounts for 65 per cent of what gets communicated when you speak. Albert Mehrabian also estimates the nonverbal share as high as 93 per cent.

According to Judith Dwyer:

"Nonverbal communication consists of that part of a message that does not encode in words. It tends to be less conscious and often releases the sender's feelings and references more spontaneously and honestly than the verbal message. If the verbal message does not match the nonverbal communication, please tend to believe the nonverbal message." We can say actions speak louder than words.

THE 7 C'S OF BUSINESS COMMUNICATION

Communication plays a vital role in the world of business. To communicate quickly and effectively with others, one should apply some principles. The principles overlap because they are based on a common concern for the audience, whether they consist of listeners or readers. These principles are seven in all and begin with the alphabet 'C'. Therefore, these are known as seven c's. These are given below:

1 COMPLETENESS ————— کامل

It means that the business message should be complete to bring the desired result. We should write everything the receiver needs to know. It helps in avoiding inquiries and further correspondence in the same context. It helps to achieve positive results. Incomplete messages are never adequate. For completeness, keep the following guideline in mind:

- It must be clear and complete.
- It should not have unnecessary details
- Provide all necessary information
- Answer all questions asked
- Give something extra when desirable

2 CONCISENESS ————— جامعیت، اختصار To the point

Conciseness is saying what you have to say in the fewest possible words without sacrificing the other C qualities. A concise message is complete without being wordy. The statement should be as brief as possible. A straightforward message saves time for both the sender and the receiver. The message should be concise without sacrificing any other principle.

- Remove wordy expressions
- Include only relevant material
- Avoid unnecessary repetition
- Omitting unnecessary details
- Include only relevant material

3 CONSIDERATION ————— لحاظ رکھتے use formal words

Consideration means acting on the "You attitude". It means writing from the point of view of the reader. When we put ourselves in our reader's place, we are considerate. We can understand our reader's desires, problems and emotions. If you can convince the buyer that your goods and services will benefit him, you have done your job. Three specific ways to indicate consideration are:

- Focus "You" instead of "I" and "we"
- Show audience benefit or interest
- Emphasize positive, pleasant facts
- It should be the faithful representation of the original passage
- There should not be any personal prejudice or bias.

4 CONCRETENESS ————— ملموس

Communicating effectively means being specific, definite, and vivid rather than vague

✓ and general. Moreover, concrete messages are more richly textured than broad or ambiguous statements. They tend to be more explicit, active, and enjoyable. A vague and general message is sure to mislead the reader and cause miscommunication. The following guidelines should help you compose concrete, convincing messages.

- The writer should use specific facts and figures. For example,
Vague: Please send us the following items by the end of this month.
Transparent: The following items should reach us on or before October 30.
- Put active verbs in the sentences
- Choose vivid, image building words

⑤ CLARITY ——— وضاحت

We should convey every message clearly and straightforwardly. Clarity depends upon the words you use and the way you use them. First, you must have a clear idea in your mind of what you want to say. Then it would help if you decided how you are going to say it. In general, the writer should use the simplest everyday expressions. After the message has been completed, it must be read at least twice and, if necessary, revised.

EXAMPLE

Unclear: Being an excellent lawyer, I am sure you can help us.

Clear: Being an excellent lawyer, you can surely help us.

The following guidelines should help you compose clear and vivid messages.

- It must be in simple words and language.
- It must be understandable for the reader.

⑥ COURTESY ——— تقسیم، خوش اخلاقی

Everyone gains where courtesy reigns" is an old but wise saying. Courtesy and politeness in the letter are essential to winning customers. Courtesy costs nothing but wins a reputation. Harsh words may cause severe damage to the business. It is not enough to say "Please" and "Thank you". The whole letter must have a courteous tone.

The following are the suggestions for generating a courteous tone:

- Be sincere, tactful, thoughtful, and appreciative
- Use expressions that show respect
- Choose non-discriminatory expressions.

⑦ CORRECTNESS ——— درستی

The message being communicated must be correct. Though mistakes are never intentional, they spoil the image of the writer. However, a message may be perfect grammatically and mechanically but still insult or lose a customer. It is essential that every letter may carefully be written and revised before it is mailed. The term correctness, as applied to business messages, also means the following three characteristics:

- Use the right level of language
- Check the accuracy of figures, facts, and words
- Maintain acceptable writing mechanics

LISTENING SKILLS

Listening is receiving language through the ears. Listening involves identifying the sounds of speech and processing them into words and sentences. When we listen, we use our ears to receive individuals sounds and we use our brain to convert these into messages that mean something to us.

Listening in any language requires focus and attention. It is a skill that some people need to work harder than others. People who have difficulty in concentration are typically poor listeners. Listening in a second language requires even greater focus.

Listening is the first of the four language skills, which are:

- ① Listening
- ② Speaking
- ③ Reading
- ④ Writing

Listening not only helps you understand what people are saying to you. It also allows you to speak clearly to other people. It helps you learn how to pronounce words correctly, how to use intonation, and where to place stress in words and sentences.

- ① "Listening is the active process of receiving and responding to spoken and sometimes unspoken messages."
- ② "Listening is a process of receiving, interpreting and reacting to a message received from the speaker. Hearing and listening are not the same."

IMPORTANCE OF LISTENING

Effective listening is actively absorbing the information and providing feedback to the speaker to know the received message. Effective listeners show speakers that their message has been received and understood. According to Kevin Murphy:

"The better you listen, the luckier you will get."

Listening is an essential aspect of communication. Through listening, business people receive information, news, instructions, advice, suggestions, proposals, etc. Therefore, listening plays a vital role in business. Good listening has the following advantages:

- It helps in the learning process
- It promotes the knowledge
- It leads to a positive attitude
- It keeps both sides active
- It encourages the spirit of giving and take
- It promotes the co-operation and co-ordination

PURPOSE OF LISTENING

By listening, we gain new information and ideas about different subjects. Listening urges us to learn new things and ideas. When we listen to the people who inspire us, they become our ideas. We start following them and we learn communication skills from them. There is always some purpose when we listen to something. If there is no purpose behind listening, perhaps we will not listen.

Following are the purposes/objectives of listening:

① TO GET INFORMATION to get knowledge

We can get information through listening to lectures in the class. If students pay attention to their studies, they can gain a lot. The great cause of the failure of students is that they ignore class lectures. Throughout our lifetimes, we get a lot of information that becomes a part of us through the spoken.

② ACCURACY OF UNDERSTANDING

A listener can check his accuracy of understanding in the classroom. The teacher gives the same lecture to all the students, but some students gain a lot due to their keen listening.

③ IMPROVEMENT OF COMMUNICATIVE SKILL

When we listen keenly to good communicators, we learn communicative skills and become good communicators.

④ LISTENING WINS FRIENDS

If we listen to someone's problems or general views, it keeps our relations alive. When we give others a chance to speak and listen encouragingly, it leads to a happy and friendly relationship.

⑤ POSITIVE FEEDBACK

The listeners give positive feedback to the speaker. They respond and feedback to the speaker. They take brief notes. They establish eye contact with the speaker. Their body language shows their interest in the speaker and his words.

⑥ HELPFUL TO SPEAKER

The excellent response of the listeners encourages the speaker to gain confidence. If people show indifference to the speaker and do not listen to him, he will not fully express his thoughts. The speaker is discouraged and cannot express his ideas well.

These are also the purposes or objectives:

- Good listening quickly ends an element of misunderstanding
- It indicates your good grooming that leads to valuable gains
- It enables you to communicate fluently and nicely
- It gives you a good understanding of different topics and subjects
- It introduces good decisions and makes your mental ability strong
- Good listening enhances your knowledge about new facts and also motivates you.

TYPES OF LISTENING

Listening is an essential communication skill. According to Andrew Wolvin and Carolyn Coakley, there are seven types of listening used for various speaking purposes and situations. They include discriminative, comprehensive, marginal, appreciative, empathetic, focus and critical. That does not always exist singly. Sometimes one speaking situation requires the listener to use more than one type of listening.

1 DISCRIMINATIVE LISTENING

It is when the listener distinguishes between the verbal and the nonverbal message. For instance, your friend may tell you that they feel good, but the frown on their face and their sluggish posture may say to you otherwise. This type of listening can be used for all kinds of public speeches.

2 COMPREHENSIVE LISTENING

It is listening to understand. Many situations can require us to attend for knowledge. For instance, if your boss at work tells you how to complete a specific task, you would need to utilize this listening if you can understand and complete the job as he instructed. Most public speeches will require a listener to use this listening, and it is mostly used when listening to an informative speech.

3 MARGINAL LISTENING

A poor listener is a marginal listener. A marginal listener refers to a listener's poor listening habits. Distractions, inattention, daydreaming, wandering attention, and avoiding complex points by finding escape routes characterize marginal listening.

4 APPRECIATIVE LISTENING

Appreciative listening is listening for deriving aesthetic pleasure when we listen to a comedian, musician or entertainer. It is the process of listening to appreciate that what the speaker is talking about. This type is often used when listening to people with who we enjoy spending time. It is also widely used when listening to many forms of entertainment, music, television, stage shows. Thus, listeners will always use appreciative listening when listening to entertainment speeches. This type is also used when listening to informative lectures and persuasive speeches, especially when the topic is something that the listener is highly interested in.

5 EMPATHETIC LISTENING

This kind of listening means imagining yourself in the other person's position and understanding his feelings through his words. It requires an ability to feel empathetic for another person's feelings and needs, requiring a sense of compassion. When a loved one tells you their feeling about a family member's death, you will probably be able to listen empathetically. Praise is a perfect example of a particular occasion speech in which the listener will hear undoubtedly. This listening aims to understand the speaker's feelings, needs, and wants so that you can admire his point of view.

6 FOCUSED LISTENING

Focused listening includes listening for specific information. The main objective is to get some exact information that might be used to make a decision. It is the most common type listening that we practice in non-formal oral communicative situations. Examples include listening to the radio, watching and listening to television programmes, listening to railway and airport announcements, etc.

⑦ CRITICAL LISTENING

It is the process of listening to understand to make evaluations and judgments about the message's content. Because this is the most complicated form and requires a high degree of skill to be developed, the next section will critically listen. The goal of critical listening is to evaluate the message at several levels: the logic of the argument, the strength of the evidence and validity of the conclusion, the implications of the statement for you and your organization, the speaker's intentions and motives, the omission of any significant or relevant points.

TRAITS OF GOOD LISTENER

A good listener gains several advantages. He has a significant number of qualities. These qualities make him a good listener. These qualities are as under:

- INQUISITIVE

A good listener considers a person's statements about their presuppositions. He is willing to ask the question, "how does this make sense to him?" and genuinely seeks an answer to that question in evaluating another person's opinion.

- CAUTIOUS AND CAREFUL

A good listener is not hasty in making judgments. He is willing to think about something for a while. He does not have to categorize everyone and everything immediately. "Know this, my beloved brothers: let every person be quick to hear, slow to speak, slow to anger."

- MUCH ATTENTIVE

A good listener pays careful attention to words. He does not assume that an idea he is hearing is identical to a statement they are already familiar with simply because it has similarities. He respects the complexity of reality and is willing to make fine distinctions and treat each person, each statement and each idea on its terms.

- ACTIVE AND ENERGETIC

A good listener is not lazy. He works hard to understand. He exerts energy in listening. For example, other people can usually tell that they hear from their body posture and nonverbal communication.

- LISTENS CALMLY

A good listener does not feel threatened by not controlling the conversation. He is comfortable with silence. He gives the speaker an unthreatened, unhurried space in which to operate while communicating.

- FLEXIBLE

A good listener understands that everyone has different communication styles and adjusts his listening to correspond to the speaker's communication style. For example, if the speaker is shy, He draws the person out more. If he is talkative, he interjects more. He does not take a "one size fits all" approach to listening.

- TACTFUL AND ARTFUL

A good listener interrupts intentionally and gently rather than habitually and rashly.

- PERSISTENT

A good listener is willing to listen to something even if it is hard to hear. He does not stop listening as soon as he becomes offended or turned off by the speaker. He can receive a rebuke.

- FAITHFUL ASSUMPTION

A good listener does not ask an unreasonable question against the motives of the speaker. He makes a good faith assumption that all other factors are equal; the speaker tries to communicate clearly and truthfully.

- THOUGHTFUL

A good listener does not equate listening with agreeing. Good listeners understand that careful listening equips you to disagree well because by listening, you know more clearly what you oppose.

- LISTENS WITH RESPECT

A good listener is not simply waiting to talk again when someone else is speaking. He values the contributions of other people.

- A GOOD LERNER

A good listener remembers that you can learn from anyone. He realizes that human subjectivity and falseness are such that most learned persons can still learn from a child.

- SOCIALABLE

A good listener loves people. He understands that listening connects to every other aspect of relationships. He understands that there is simply no substitute for genuine affection for other people. "The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, open to reason, full of mercy and good fruits, impartial and sincere" Thus, he should be sociable.

- ANALYTICAL

A good listener pays attention to nonverbal communication without discounting verbal communication. He pays attention to the fact that he is paying attention to both nonverbal communication and verbal communication.

- TAKES INITIATIVE

A good listener is willing to speak. He does not equate listening to silence. He understands that the speaker may need them to communicate to make further conversation.

- GENIAL

A good listener understands how essential listening is to a relationship. He does not assume or underestimate the value of listening. He values and seeks to cultivate good listening skills.

To conclude, the qualities mentioned above show a good listener. He gains a significant number of advantages. He gets valuable information and gains knowledge, as well.

ACTIVE LISTENING

Active listening means being attentive to what someone else is saying. The goal of active listening is to understand the feelings and views of the person. Active listening is an important business communication skill. It can involve making sounds that indicate attentiveness and the listener giving feedback in the form of a paraphrased rendition of what has been said by the other party for their confirmation. Active listening comes from the person-centred therapy of Carl Rogers. But, active listening is not only used in the therapeutic setting; it is an essential component of effective communication.

How can we develop the ability to listen to others patiently and carefully? The following headings can play a vital role in making listening effective and result-oriented. These two headings are as under:

- By paying attention
- Dealing with the disturbance caused by any element of society

BY PAYING ATTENTION

Poor listening is very damaging as communication is prone to distortion. The listener's job is to show eagerness in the speaker and speech by his expressions, attentiveness, and asking questions about the address if required. Thus, the listener will persuade the speaker to convey his ideas clearly and carefully. Thus by paying attention, the listener can improve and make his listening very effective.

DEALS WITH DISTURBANCE

You should train yourself to avoid physical distractions and focus on the message entirely in your active listening skill. An attractive face in the room, sometimes even the fragrance of perfume, can be the reason for distraction. However, a careful listener must exercise a great deal of mental discipline to remain focused on the speaker's message.

With continuous listening, people get tired and start losing interest in the message. They lose their interest in the speech, but they have to force themselves to stay with the address and the contents. Many a time, such a problem arises because of 'brain time'.

On average, a person speaks around 130-150 words per minute but can listen to 600-700 words per minute

To overcome this difficulty, the listener should be alert in anticipating what the speaker will say next. If the speaker's speech has some interest, the listener's interest in the address will survive. It will enable that listener to recall the lecture better and constantly review what was spoken earlier.

Often listeners interrupt the speaker without listening to the complete message unless the speaker has finished. Effective listening is only possible if the listener patiently listens to the entire speech.

STEPS FOR EFFECTIVE LISTENING SKILLS

In today's high-tech, high-speed, high-stress world, communication is more significant than ever, yet we seem to devote less and less time to listen to one another. Genuine listening has become a rare gift—the gift of time. It helps build relationships, solve problems, ensure understanding, resolve conflicts, and improve accuracy. At work, effective listening means fewer errors and less wasted time. At home, it helps develop resourceful, self-reliant kids who can solve their problems. Listening builds friendships and careers. It saves time and money, as well.

① EYE CONTACT

Eye contact is considered an essential ingredient of effective communication. When we talk, we look each other in the eye, that doesn't mean that you can't carry on a conversation from across the room or from another room, but if the conversation continues for any length of time, you will get up and move. The desire for better communication pulls you together.

Do your conversational partners the courtesy of turning to face them. Put aside papers, books, the phone and other distractions. Look at them, even if they don't look at you. Shyness, uncertainty, shame, guilt, or other emotions, along with cultural taboos, can inhibit eye contact in some people under some circumstances. Excuse the other guy, but stay focused yourself.

② BE ATTENTIVE, BUT RELAXED

Now that you have made eye contact, relax. You don't have to stare fixedly at the other person. You can look away now and then and carry on like a normal person. The important thing is to be attentive. The dictionary says that to "attend" another person means to:

- Be present
- Give attention
- Apply or direct yourself
- Pay attention
- Remain ready to serve

Mentally screen out distractions, like background activity and noise. Also, try not to focus on the speaker's accent or speech mannerisms to the point where they become distracted. Finally, don't be distracted by your thoughts, feelings, or biases.

③ KEEP AN OPEN MIND

Listen without judging the other person or mentally criticizing the things she tells you. If what she says alarms you, go ahead and feel alarmed, but don't speak to yourself, "Well, that was a stupid move." As soon as you indulge in judgmental bemusements, you've compromised your effectiveness as a listener.

Listen without jumping to conclusions. Remember that the speaker is using language to represent the thoughts and feelings inside her brain. You don't know what those thoughts and feelings are and the only way you'll find out is by listening.

④ DON'T BE A SENTENCE-GRABBER

Occasionally my partner can't slow his mental pace enough to listen effectively, so he tries to speed up by interrupting and finishing my sentences. It usually lands him way off base because he follows his thought train and doesn't learn where my thoughts are headed. After a couple of rounds of this, I usually ask, "Do you want to have this conversation by yourself, or do you want to hear what I have to say?" I wouldn't do that with everyone, but it works with him.

⑤ MIND MAPPING

Allow your mind to create a mental model of the information being communicated. Whether a literal picture or an arrangement of abstract concepts, your brain will do the necessary work if you stay focused, with senses fully alert. When listening for long stretches, concentrate on, and remember keywords and phrases.

When it's your turn to listen, don't spend the time planning what to say next. You can't rehearse and listen at the same time. Think only about what the other person is saying. Finally, concentrate on what is being said, even if it bores you. If your thoughts start to wander, immediately force yourself to refocus.

⑥ ASK QUESTIONS FOR UNDERSTANDING

A colleague is excitedly telling you about her trip to Vermont and all the beautiful things she did and saw at lunch. In the course of this chronicle, she mentions that she spent some time with a mutual friend. You jump in with, "Oh, I haven't heard from Alice in ages. How is she?" and, lie that, discussion shifts to Alice and her divorce, and the poor kids, which leads to a comparison of custody laws, and before you know it an hour is gone and Vermont is a distant memory.

This particular conversational affront happens all the time. Our questions lead people in directions that have nothing to do with where they thought they were going. Sometimes we work our way back to the original topic, but very often, we don't.

When you notice that your question has led the speaker astray, take responsibility for getting the conversation back on track by saying something like, "It was great to hear about Alice, but tell me more about your adventure in Vermont."

⑦ TRY TO FEEL WHAT THE SPEAKER IS FEELING

If you feel sad when the person with whom you are talking expresses sadness, joy when she sounds joy, fearful when she describes her fears-and convey those feelings through your facial expressions and words-then your effectiveness as a listener is assured.

⑧ GIVE THE SPEAKER REGULAR FEEDBACK

The idea gives the speaker some proof that you are listening and following her train of thought-not indulging in your fantasies while she talks to either. Regardless of whether at work or home, in task situations, always restate instructions and messages to be sure you understand correctly.

✓ ORAL COMMUNICATION SKILLS

PRESENTATION SKILLS

A presentation is a live mode of sharing information with a selected audience. It is a form of oral communication in which a person shares factual information with a particular audience. Presentation is a verbal activity that uses a visual medium to discuss new ideas and information with a specific audience persuasively and convincingly.

SUCCESSFUL PERSUASIVE PUBLIC SPEAKING

Persuasive speaking is defined as: "the art of convincing and persuading others to give favorable attention to our point of view."

Two components make this definition a useful one. First, it acknowledges the artfulness or skill required to persuade others. Second, it delineates the ends of persuasion to convince others to think favourably of our perspective.

PERSUASIVE PUBLIC SPEAKING

Persuasive speeches are those where you try to persuade or convince your audience about an idea or product. These speeches aim to influence and change the opinions of the audience. It can be demanding as you could be facing a group of people who may have a different view. The most crucial point that has to be kept in mind is that you want to influence others' thoughts and ideas.

Persuasive speaking is speaking that most people engage in this speaking. This speech type can involve everything from arguing about politics to talking about what to eat for dinner. Persuasive speaking is very connected to the audience, as the speaker must, in a sense, meet the audience halfway. The speaker does not entirely control persuasion. Persuasion occurs when an audience assents to what a speaker says. Consequently, persuasive speaking requires extra attention to audience analysis.

Persuasive speeches are designed to persuade the people. Speakers use more pointed language and should try to use persuasive speech to change their audience's perspective or encourage them to take a particular action. It is essential to point out to the audience a clear goal that effectively delivers a message. There should be a mental dialogue between the audience and the speaker. The audience will respond to the speaker throughout the speech; the speaker needs to anticipate the questions and critiques that the audience may have.

HOW TO GIVE A PERSUASIVE SPEECH?

The words someone uses, how fast or slow one speaks, tone of voice, and speech brevity affect how someone relays a message or ideas. We should keep these three steps in mind while preparing and delivering a persuasive speech. These are as follows:

- ① Preparing: Determining goals of your speech, organizing your thoughts into 1-3 major themes

③ Performing: Start strong; stick to major points; close strong

④ Practicing: Delivery

② PREPARING YOUR SPEECH

Determine your goal. Speaking persuasively in a speech is a valuable professional skill. This ability helps you convince listeners to view an issue as you do and achieve goals that require others' support. The first thing to do if you need to give a persuasive speech is to consider your audience and objectives. Your thoughts will be the foundation of what you will say and how you will say it.

③ PERFORMING YOUR SPEECH

The three parts of every good speech: Whether you have one minute or one hour, a typical, compelling, persuasive speech follows the following format:

- ① Opening: Summarize what you are going to say
- ② Body: Cover your 2-4 major themes
- ③ Conclusion: Summarize what you just said and make a final, specific appeal

④ PRACTICING YOUR SPEECH

Finally, it's time to practice your speech. You might believe, incorrectly, that feeling nervous about public speaking is a sign that you cannot be a strong public speaker. It is untrue! Even excellent, experienced speakers can handle all the nervousness symptoms when presenting: dry mouth, elevated heart rate, shaky voice, etc. Practising beforehand is one of the best ways to make sure that you get your message across, even if you feel some nervousness.

Persuasive speeches can be organized in several ways.

- What is essential to remember is that you have strong supporting material
- Research is vital and a key to convincing the audience
- Always ensure that your goals are ethical and that you use ethical methods
- To be an effective persuasive speaker, you must first examine your audience

IMPORTANCE OF ORAL COMMUNICATION

Oral communication is an essential means of communicating. It plays a vital role in all walks of life. A good presentation can be very effective for a person; it may help get a good job offer from the company he always wants to join. Thus, he may get a significant number of advantages from the company. Inadequate or ineffective ways of presenting ideas reduce the professional image of the person. Oral communication also deals with working with others. Employees who can speak well can set themselves apart from their fellow workers. When most people discuss verbal communication, they are referring to speeches and presentations.

Written communication has become more popular due to online communication networks. Employees in many fields are expected to give oral presentations on occasion. Many people suffer from anxiety related to delivering speeches. This type of communication is essential in modern offices. While offices rely on email and text communication more than ever before, these communication channels are not as fast and effective as oral discussions and fostering about others giving a speech both consciously and subconsciously, and those who stand out for it, many renowned speakers have admitted to practising extensively and studying other opportunities to deliver speeches. A bit of extra preparation can help people make the most of their presentations.

To conclude, an effective presentation is essential for all of us. We should know to present our ideas persuasively, make our audience interested in our production, use suitable visuals during our presentation, and reflect confidence while speaking. A person making a presentation should have the ability to begin his presentation effectively, develop his ideas logically and conclude his presentation with something extraordinary.

EFFECTIVE PRESENTATION

An effective presentation is an integral part of modern communication. It is as important as the written presentation. It is an art to express one's idea completely and successfully before the audience. Through effective representations, the sender would be able to convince the receiver and achieves the desired result. At every stage of life, effective presentation enhances the excellent effect. Through successful oral presentation, one can easily manage one's personal and business affairs. It makes us curious to know the strategies of an adequate representation.

WHAT IS PRESENTATION?

Before we examine how to structure a presentation, let's define some terms. Imagine all the different kinds of speaking you'll be doing in business: casual chatting, phone conversations, panel discussions, interviewing, conferences, seminars, meetings, speeches, question and answer periods, presentations and probably others. These activities easily fall into two groups: those you speak to one person and those you are talking to a group of people. Let's put aside the one to speak for right now and concentrate on speaking to a group.

Usually, you speak to a group of people in one of three situations:

- When you are doing most of the speaking yourself, either to inform or to persuade
- When you have more give and take with your audience, to answer questions
- When your audience is doing most of the talking, to solve problems as a group

Indeed, most people would agree that terms such as speech or lecture imply that the speaker is doing most of the talking; question and answer periods or panel discussions involve answering questions; meetings or brainstorming sessions mean the audience is doing most of the talking. The following are the main points that will help you to make an effective presentation. These are as under:

- Defining purpose / establish your objective
- Analyze audience and the locale

- Product Appearance
- Various parts
- Functioning
- Facilities
- Conclusion

To conclude, it is essential to keep in mind that your outline is only a guide. Its primary purpose is to help you deliver a clear and compelling speech that flows smoothly and effectively, communicating all your ideas.

✓ USE OF VISUAL AIDS — امری نظری موادات

Preparing an effective presentation involves more than structure and delivery. Another important consideration is what kind of visuals to use. Some displays may require visual aids. In such cases, the speaker must make, in advance, arrangements of the visual aids etc. I remember the Chinese proverb: "a picture is worth a thousand words" It means the visual medium is the best medium of presentation. Visual aids may be used as notes to emphasise and clarify the points of the topic.

Visual aids play a vital role in the presentation. It will be best if you use these aids according to the knowledge of the people. People having less knowledge don't confuse them by using complex aids. It would help if you chose the right aids for the right people. It will be understandable for them. Thus, every person differs from another person in knowledge.

IMPORTANCE OF VISUAL AIDS

Herodotus rightly says for the present audience that people trust their ears less than their eyes. Thus, the importance of visual aids becomes more effective and essential.

- Demonstrate key points
- Increase audience interest
- Increase the impact of the message
- Help listeners retain information
- Help present ideas without depending on notes
- Use simple and easy language for the understanding of the audience

There is no doubt that visual aids play an essential role in making your presentation compelling and impressive. These visual aids must be used for the help of the audience.

DIFFERENT TYPES OF VISUAL AIDS

There are many kinds of visual aids. Use the following visual aids in your presentations to make them effective and impressive. These aids can be categorized into five main headings. These are as under:

- ① Overhead Projector Slides
- ② PowerPoint Presentations
- ③ White or black Board
- ④ Charts
- ⑤ Video DVD or (VHS)
- ⑥ Handouts

① OVERHEAD PROJECTOR SLIDES

An overhead projector is a machine for projecting a still image on a wall, screen or board. It is a handy tool found in most lectures and seminar rooms. It is an effective alternative to the blackboard. The general principles are:

- Show only the required information
- Keep transparencies organized
- Separate the transparencies using a sheet of paper
- Use pointer on the screen
- Be ready with your notes in case of power failure
- Use larger fonts; avoid ornamental fonts.
- Use a pencil or pen on the transparency to draw the audience a specific item.
- Make yourself familiar with the operations of the overhead projector.
- Avoid giving your audience too many tests or overly complicated diagrams.

② POWERPOINT PRESENTATIONS

PowerPoint is probably now the most commonly used form of visual aid. It can help you in your presentation, poorly used; however, it can have opposite effects. The general principles are:

- Be familiar with the operation of the slide show
- Transfer your file to the hard disk
- Keep a printed copy of the slides
- Do practice your presentation
- Check the computer system before loading.
- Make known yourself with the process of the slides

There is no doubt that the use of PowerPoint is the most effective and influential way presentation. It plays a very vital role in making presentations effective and result oriented.

③ WHITE OR BLACKBOARD

The white or blackboard can be very useful to help explain the sequence of ideas routines, particularly in the sciences. Use them to clarify your title or to record your key points as you introduce your presentation. The general principles are:

- Clean the board well before starting and check the condition of the marker
- Stand to the side as you write
- Check the board before starting.
- Keep contents which you may want to refer to again
- Write large letters
- Divide the boards into columns and write legibly
- Don't face the board while talking to the audience
- Give the audience enough time for writing down what is on the board
- Make sure your audience has taken down a reference before rubbing it off

There is no doubt that the use of the white or blackboard is of great help. It plays a vital role in making the presentation very effective and result oriented.

① CHARTS

Various kinds of charts include flip charts, cardboard charts, and desk-top charts. Chart equipment is far less complex than projection equipment since no electricity or wires are involved. A flip chart comprises a pad or series of pieces of paper, a stand, and markers. The flip-chart form may be flipped over the air or ripped off and attached to the wall. A cardboard chart stands alone because it is printed on sturdy cardboard. It may be any size you wish. This kind of chart is appropriate only when you are presenting to a small number of people.

Overall, all these charts' main advantage is the lighting: you can keep the room well illuminated and maintain eye contact with your audience - whether you're showing standard charts prepared in advance or informal charts prepared during the presentation. Another advantage of charts is their lack of technology. They have no electrical parts that might break down. The general principles are:

- Make your writing clear and readable
- Make your diagrams as simple as possible
- Write in large letters
- Use different coloured markers
- Use only one side of the chart.

② VIDEO (DVD or VHS)

Video gives you a chance to show vital visual information. It uses to bring movement pictures and sound into your presentation. Always make sure that the clip is directly relevant to your content. Tell your audience what to look for. Avoid showing any more film that you need. These are the general principles for using video as a tool.

- Use video to bring movement and sound into your presentation
- The clip must be directly relevant to your content
- The result of the video must be evident with clear sound.

There is no doubt that video as a presentation tool is the most effective method of making a presentation effective and positive.

③ HANDOUTS

Handouts are the final kind of visual aid. Handouts have one enormous advantage over the other types of visual aids: they provide a copy your audience members can take away with them. They have a huge disadvantage: you cannot control your audience's reading ahead of you. To overcome that disadvantage, use handouts only in these four ways:

- ① Give summary handouts only at the end of the presentation.
- ② Use handouts for the very detailed data your audience must-see, but which are too complex to put on a slide or chart. Give these complex-data handouts only when you get to your presentation point when you are discussing them.
- ③ Avoid passing around a single copy of a handout so that people are seeing it at different times.
- ④ Some presenters use handouts to encourage people to take notes.
