

UNIT NO 1 (QUESTION/ANSWER)

Q1. what is the TAPE in terms of reading texts? Discuss.

TAPE is an acronym word in which the letter “T” stands for the “type of text”, the letter “A” stands for the “audience of text”, the letter “P” stands for the “purpose of text” and the letter “E” stands for the “effect of text”. In other words, before reading a text for the very first time, TAPE tends you to focus on these questions:

(Type)

1. What kind of text is it?
2. Who is it aimed at? (Audience)
3. What is its purpose? (Purpose)
4. What effect does it have on me?

(Effect)

To conclude, you must analyze the above-mentioned questions while reading a text. And to know the answers to these questions, you don't need to read the whole text.

Q2. Differentiate between type and genre in terms of text?

A text is either non-fiction or fiction.

For example, a newspaper article is included in non-fiction and a novel is placed in fiction.

When we talk about type, it is associated with a non-fiction text and its types are:

1. Recount
2. Information
3. Explanation/Description
4. Instruction
5. Persuasion
- 6 Argument

Remember it's not easy to find purely one kind of text as it can be a mixture of different text types. These text types help readers analyze the text but provide a rough guide because of the text mixing. On the other hand, the genre is a term used for different types of fiction. The major genres of fiction are: -

1. Science fiction
2. Crime
3. Romance

Each genre has its own particular set of characteristics in terms of plot, character, setting, and language. To sum up, type is a word especially used for a particular variety of non-fiction text, and genre is associated with a particular variety of fiction.

Q3. Discuss the importance of the audience in terms of text/writing?

The intended readership is termed as "audience". In another way, we can say that the people who are aimed at within a text are called the audience of that text. Different texts target different people so the audience can be different in different texts. The audience of a text can be guessed by the title or cover of the book or even the genre. For example, fairy tales generally target children. Books on cooking generally target the people who are interested in cooking. So the target audience must be greater in numbers to impact broadly. Here Gulliver's Travels is a noticeable example because on the surface level, its audience becomes children but on the deeper level, it targets the common people, the poor, the rich, and the special people like kings, queens, politicians, scientists, etc. Thus its impact is broader as its audience belongs to the major part of the social setup.

Q4. What are the major purposes of text/writing? Discuss.

There are four major categories in which writings can be divided in terms of the purposes of the writer. These are

1. To imagine, explore, entertain
2. To Inform, explain, describe
3. To persuade, Argue, advise
4. To analyze, review, comment

When we discuss the first category, it means that the writer, by going into a new world on the wings of imagination, will try to explore something to entertain the audience. For example, science fiction novels like The War of the Worlds by H. G. Wells, the series of Harry Potter novels by J.K. Rowling.

In the second category of purposes, the writer wants to inform, explain or describe some idea or item. For example, a newspaper article, "Sweet Dreams Made by Machine", is about a new gadget "Yememi Kobo" invented by Takara.

The third category of purposes talks about the texts or writings that try to win the hearts of the audience through strong arguments either in favor of or against something. For example, "The Functions of a Teacher" by Bertrand Russell.

Last but not least is the fourth category of purposes which talks about analyses, reviews, or comments. In this kind of writing, the purpose of the writer is to provide some kind of analysis based on facts and figures. Such writings can also welcome you with important comments about a certain topic or issue of some great importance. This type of writing can also be a review that highlights some strong logical and critical points about the positive and negative sides of something. For example, books analyses, commentaries, and film reviews like the review of "The Matrix Revolutions" by Christopher Null.

To summarise the discussion, these categories help you understand the writer's intentions and provide us with a rough idea. In complex writings, these purposes can mix with each other according to the need of the contents. However, a writer without a purpose is worthless and does not get the attention of the audience.

UNIT NO 2 (QUESTION/ANSWER)

Q1. Explain Eppie's actions and how she escaped detection?

Eppie was a mischievous toddling baby girl. Her father was a weaver. He used to fasten her to his loom by a means of a broad and long linen strip whenever he was busy in weaving. One bright summer's morning, when Silas was so much involved in his weaving, Eppie got an opportunity and stole silently his scissors left on a ledge of his loom. After securing the scissors, she went back to her truckle-bed and cut the linen strip. She didn't let her father know about the clicking of the scissors in the noise of the weaving machine. After having cut the linen strip, she had quickly run out of the open door to enjoy the sunshine. On the other hand, Silas believed her to be a better child than usual.

Q2. Explain in your own words what Silas was doing and what was happening to him?

Silas was searching Eppie out in the bright sunshine. He was even committing a misdemeanor by going into Mr. Osgood's crop fields just for Eppie's sake. He was looking at her all around the hedgerows. He even traversed the grass to search Eppie behind every group of red sorrel. He left no stone unturned to search her but all in vain. Nothing positive was happening to him. The more he approached her, the more she went away.

Q3. Explain Silas's state of mind when she had run out of home?

When Eppie had run out of home, Silas thought that Eppie's actions demanded severe punishment as it was a case of aberration. Later, when he found her again, overcome with convulsive joy, he forgot the punishment and could do nothing but snatch her up and cover her with half-sobbing kisses.

Q 4. Why might it "have been better if Eppie had cried more?"

It might "have been better if Eppie had cried more" because, in this way, she could have spent more time as punishment in the coal closet and had got a long-lasting lesson over her mischievous actions and attitude. She would not have been able to go into the coal-hole once again to make mischief.

Q5. Read from paragraph 3 to the end of the passage. In no more than 80 of your own words, explain what happened to Eppie?

After finding Eppie from a muddy pond, Silas carried her home. He thought that she must be punished for being naughty and put her in the coat closet and closed the door. Just after a moment, Silas let her out again as quickly as she cried. Now he washed her, changed her dirty clothes, and didn't fasten her with the linen strip again. However, she again made mischief by entering the coal hole and making her hands and face black.

UNIT NO 4 (QUESTION/ANSWER)

Activity 4.1

Read through the article Kaspar Houser and find examples of each of the following techniques in the text and note them down.

1. A sentence denoting a chronological recount of the story

On March 6th, 1828, in Nuremberg, a young man in peasant dress, and with the demeanour of an intoxicated person, handed a letter to one of the citizens of the town.

2. Quotation from primary source material

"I send you a boy who wishes faithfully to serve his king. This boy was left in my the house the 7th day of October, 1812, and I am myself a poor day-labourer, who have also ten children, and have enough to do to maintain my own family... step out of my house."

3. Quotation inserted in the text

Ans. "In all that he said, the conjunctions, participles, and ...you must not say 'you' to him, but 'Kaspar'"

4. The writer's interpretation of the facts

Activity 4.2

Kaspar Houser: Summary

Kaspar Houser was a boy from Nuremberg who had spent about 16 years (1812-1828) of his early age in a cell under the custody of an intoxicated poor labourer, who appeared to have been his keeper. The jail period had not only affected his linguistic ability but also deformed his bone structure of feet and knees. He could only speak two words: "Bua" for people and "ross" for animals. However, he was able to speak incoherently, missing the conjunctions, participles and adverbs. The syntax of his sentences was also confusing. For example, 'Kaspar very well', instead of 'I am very well'.

In 1829, he started living with Herr Daumer's family and had improved his reading and writing a lot. He decided to write his memoirs and started writing but couldn't complete the project as someone tried to kill him but he survived the attack. In 1833, a stranger stabbed him in a park and he died after three days.

Activity 4.3

Q1. What is the "dream workshop" designed to do?

It is a new gadget invented by Takara to help people shape their nightly sleep. By using it, people could see dreams of their own choice. The term "dream workshop" is the English meaning of the Japanese name "Yumemi Kobo" used for a dream machine.

Q2. Explain in your own words how it (Yumemi Kobo) works.

The dream machine, Yumemi Kobo, comes equipped with a voice recorder, array of lights, picture frame, fragrance dispenser, selection of internally stored background music, two speakers and a timer. All these components work in conjunction and allow users to design their dreams through multi-sensory stimuli of scents, sounds and more.

Q3. Write directions for the use of the dream machine using numbered steps.

- 1 First, users attach a photograph or image of a desired dream to the Yumemi Kobo.
2. Then they concentrate on the image, playing out the desired dream in their head while making a voice recording of keywords describing their fantasy.
3. Next they insert one of the dream machine's scents in the fragrance dispenser and select accompanying music from the tracks offered in the device's database.
4. Now they turn on the dream machine, and it starts to lull them to sleep with soft lights and serenades.

Q4. Explain one of the limitations of the dream machine.

One big limitation is there is no biofeedback with it. It means it can't tell when the REM Occurs. The REM is the sleeping period associated with dreaming., during which the sleeper's eyeballs jerk rapidly.

Q5. Explain one benefit of using the dream machine.

It could encourage people's creativity. Creativity is linked to a new idea which is based on imagination. So the dream machine could be useful to enhance your imagination.

UNIT NO 5 (QUESTION/ANSWER)

Otzi the Iceman: Summary

In 1991, someone found the frozen mummy of a Copper Age man who climbed up to the icy mountains of the Schnalstal glacier over 5000 years ago and died. Since March 1998 the mummy and its articles, after the complete examination, have been on display at the South Tyrol Museum of Archaeology. The first ever anatomical studies were performed on a glacier mummy of the 4th millennium BC. Only the left hip area was found damaged. The iceman, with his equipment and clothing, shows the lifestyle and the general appearance of an Alps person during the Copper Age. The clothing, composed of a cap, hide coat, grass cloak, leggings, belt, loincloth and a pair of shoes, remarkably contains no woven materials. The necessary equipment of the iceman made him able to look after himself in his last trip into the high mountains. He could repair and replace any damaged piece of equipment. The mummy of the iceman is preserved at -6°C in one of the two identical cold chambers with independent refrigeration systems. Visitors can view the mummy from the examination room through a window. Activity 5.3 Extending Vocabulary

The Extinction Crisis: Summary

In the history of biological diversity, the human species are destroying many other species hundreds of times faster than the old rate of extinction. The major causes are the increasing human population and the consumption of resources. Climate change and collision of meteors with the earth are other causes of extinction. The way humans are destroying, degrading and fragmenting the habitat of other species, it will be difficult for new species to evolve. Humans should realize that they heavily depend on plants and animals for food, medicines, clothing and shelter. The intact ecosystem is helpful for purifying the air, filtering harmful substances out of the water. An ecosystem with more species is better than one that has lost some species and the keystone species are very important to the health of their ecosystems.

In many cultures, certain animals are very significant in terms of not only their religious importance but also the way they entertain us. Most people want to save other species as they are now much worried about the decline of wildlife. The wildlife laws area also now protecting animals from their illegal hunting. As a result, humans are also now too concerned about all kinds of animals irrespective of their economic value.

Practice Unit 1

Responding to the Text

Reading for Information

Q1. Explain why "pho is much more than just a breakfast to the north Vietnamese" (/ 13).

It is so because the north Vietnamese consider the noodle soup - pho as "the soul of the nation", "a contribution to human happiness" and an addiction "worse than tobacco".

Q2. Explain the way to find the best pho stall.

The best way to find the best pho stalls is to search for a stall with a large crowd round it. The writer, on this principle, found Thao Van's portable restaurant by Dong Xuan market in the city, Hanoi.

Q3. How did pho gain its name?

Pho gained its name from the French word feu which means fire. It may have come with the French colonialists from coffre-feu which means a portable stove. And a portable stove is used for pho.

Q4. How are you supposed to eat pho?

You are supposed to eat pho fast otherwise in five minutes the noodles become waterlogged and lose their texture.

Q5. Why are the stools so small?

The stools are dwarf-sized as they are easy to carry while running away quickly at the time of the sudden raid or arrival of police.

Q6. Why are pho stalls outlawed now?

Street pho stalls are outlawed in modern Vietnam and are called guerilla restaurants because they are small units, highly mobile, make an impact and then move out fast.

Q7. Why is the "aromatic fog ... like a banner" (/ 5)?

It is so because the aromatic fog works like the stall's advertisement banner. It wafts from the cauldron of noodle soup - pho over the customers and attracts many others.

Q8. Explain the meaning of the word "whispers" (/ 11).

"Whispers" means the different low pitch voices about the different ingredients (e.g. liquorice, onion and cinnamon) of the noodle soup - pho.

Q9. What is implied by the word "hovering" (/ 27)?

The implied meaning of the word "hovering" is staying i.e. there are motor scooters staying nearby the pho stall to deliver takeaways.

Q10. Explain why "Ordering yourself pho bo toi, raw beef noodle soup, at a street stall is a foolproof way of getting a laugh out of the locals" (42-44).

It is so because the word toi is used rudely for Westerners. It means raw and tender red beef. And when a Westerner orders pho bo toi, the locals start laughing at that Westerner.

Unit No 6

ACTIVITY 6.5 Exploring the Text

Q1. Why is the word "mother" (/ 8) in quotation marks?

Ans. To indicate emphasis, the word "mother" is in quotation marks. Quotation marks around a single word are used for emphasis but only when you quote a word or term someone else has already used it.

Q2. What effect does the opening sentence of the second paragraph have on the reader?

Ans. The opening sentence of the second paragraph shows a disturbing effect on the reader. It informs the reader about some serious problem of the wailing old woman who had formed a crowd around her.

Q3. In the second paragraph, what impression do we get of the people helping the child?

Ans. The people were upset but willing to help save the sick baby girl. By turning her over, slapping her and opening her eyes, they were trying to know how critical the condition of the sick child was. The writer himself went into the hotel and asked the girl at reception to call a doctor.

Q4. What attitude did the author have towards the receptionist? Why do you think this was so?

Ans. The author was having a criticizing and aggressive attitude towards the receptionist. He asked her to call the doctor for the sick baby girl but she didn't agree to do that. The author argued with her and tried to convince her but all was in vain. The author did so because he was too worried about the critical condition of the sick baby girl.

Q5. Fenton says in line 43, "From the start everything went wrong." Explain in your own words what went wrong on the journey.

Ans. The writer hired a taxi to take the sick child to the best hospital. When they were on the way to hospital, they faced many problems. First, the taxi ran out of petrol. Second, a van blocked their way as it stopped in front of their taxi. Third, a train had to pass very soon through a level-crossing on their way. Fourth, they were hit by the side-effects of Typhoon Sarah. Fifth, their tyre split but they noticed it later. Last but not the least, the driver couldn't drive fast in the cloudburst.

Q6. Fenton says, "We were travelling through Cholon, the Chinese quarter, on an errand of Western mercy" (/ 56-57). What does this tell us about Fenton's attitude?

Ans. Fenton's attitude is ironic here as he was travelling through Cholon which is considered the biggest Chinatown in the world by area. Cholon means a 'big market' in Vietnamese language. No Chinese came forward to help the sick baby girl but on behalf of the Western people, Fenton undertook a short journey in order to help save the sick baby girl.

Q7. How did Fenton imagine the hospital?

Ans. Fenton imagined and sketched the hospital in his mind like a large cool building equipped with some latest equipment. He could imagine the sententious plaques on the walls. He imagined a ward named after the former US Ambassador and called it the Bunker Ward.

Q8. Describe Fenton's attitude towards the Vietnamese doctor.

Ans. Fenton considered the Vietnamese doctor a quack and was panicking before her treatment. However, the sick child recovered in a few minutes after the free treatment. Fenton felt humiliated and had never been more furious in his life before that particular moment.

Q9. How do you feel Fenton behaved during this incident? Explain your views.

Ans. James Fenton behaved like a person who was unnecessarily too worried to help save the beggars sick baby. He was assuming and predicting things too early. He wanted to take the sick baby girl to the best hospital in the locality. He didn't trust the local herbal treatment but, to his amazement, the sick baby got instant relief from the herbal treatment and recovered in no time.
