

Biography of Ibn.e.Khaldoon

He was born in Tunisia in May 27,1332

His Full name was Abd-Ur-Rahman bin Muhammed
ibn Khaldun

He was Muslim Scholar, Philosopher, Historian, Social Scientist and he is also considered as a True father of Sociology

His most Significant Work is "Muqaddimah"

Famous Theories

Theory of Al-Assabiyah
Theory of Urban and Rural Society
Theory of Social Change

He died on 17 March,1406

THEORY OF AL-ASSABIYAH

Ibn Khaldun social theory Al-Asabia is about “social solidarity”.

Asabiyah means social solidarity, Social Intergration and social Cohesion

According to Ibn Khaldun “Al-Asabia” is the force, which push individuals towards one another and create a sense of unity amongst them

This force of unity results in the creation of states

Al-Asabia is sharing of similar feeling amongst individuals which bond and unite them together, as a group

According to Ibn.e.Khaldun, The tribes are successful because they have Highest Assbiyah

Asabiyah was important for economic, intellectual and political development of Society

THEORY OF AL-ASSABIYAH

Ibn.e.khuldun was of the views that man is the social animal, but he becomes a man/human with the cooperation of all social elements that becomes a source of satisfaction of need

Emile Durkheim" had similar view about mutual relationships amongst individuals, According to him, sharing similar feelings and motives among individuals lead towards the creation of society where individuals live collectively.

HE also Explain that the more the tribes deviate from asabiyah, the more is the element of deviance; Religious movements sharpens the force of asabiyah and no movement can succeed without it

"Ibn Khaldun" discussed in his book "Muqadama" that, when individuals start living together in a society, conflict is inevitable, which leads to the violation of state laws. Unity among citizens, helps to defend the state against, external aggression and domination.

THEORY OF AL-ASSABIYAH

He believed that, individual start living together because of Al-Asabia, common interest attract them towards, one another and they start living together, as group. With the passage of time groups evolve in clans and tribes and finally transform into societies.

If people of state are not united then, it is easy for foreigners to control and rule over it

Martindale wrote that, the spirit of solidarity is important for individuals and state. Individuals need each other help in satisfying their basic needs. Single individual cannot perform all the duties, which are crucial for survival. Cooperation of one individual with another is inevitable because they are dependent on each other.

Nomads are the good example of solidarity, they travel together live together and face external enemy together, somehow their survival depend upon their unity