

Introduction to Civics And Citizenship

(Definition Of Civics,Citizenship and Civic Engagement)

1. Civics: F.J Gould says “That civics is the study of intitutions,Habits,Activities and spirit by which man or women may fulfil the duties and receive the rights or benefits of the membership in a political community/
2. Citizenship: The legal status of a citizen as a member of a state. Including their rights, responsibilities and privilages.
3. Civic Engagement: Civic engagement is when people get involved in their community or society to make a positive difference. This can include activities like voting, volunteering, participating in local events, or speaking up about issues that matter.

(Historical evolution of civic participation)

Civic participation, or the involvement of people in making decisions about how their society is run, has changed over time.

1. Ancient Times: In ancient civilizations like Greece and Rome, only a small group of people (usually rich, free men) could participate in politics. In ancient Athens, for example, citizens could vote on laws, but this didn't include women, slaves, or foreigners. So, only a few people had the power to make decisions.
2. Medieval Period (Middle Ages): During the Middle Ages, most power was held by kings, lords, and the Church. Ordinary people didn't have much say in how things were run. People lived under a feudal system, where kings and lords made most decisions. However, some towns had councils where citizens could help decide local matters.
3. Renaissance and Enlightenment (16th to 18th Century): In the Renaissance and Enlightenment, new ideas about rights and democracy started to spread. Thinkers like John Locke and Rousseau argued that people should have a say in their government. This led to big changes, like the American Revolution (1776) and the French Revolution (1789), where people fought for more rights and to be part of decision-making.

4. 19th Century (Industrial Revolution): The Industrial Revolution brought huge changes. As more people moved to cities and started working in factories, they demanded more rights, especially the right to vote. Slowly, voting rights were expanded to include not just rich men but also working-class men and, later, women. For example, women in many countries gained the right to vote in the early 1900s.

5. 20th Century (Civil Rights Movements): The 20th century was a time of major civil rights movements. People fought for equality and the right to vote, regardless of race, gender, or background. For example, in the U.S., African Americans fought for voting rights, and women campaigned for the right to vote. Many countries expanded democracy, and more people were involved in voting and other forms of civic participation.

6. 21st Century (Digital Age): In today's world, technology has changed how people participate in society. With the internet and social media, people can organize protests, sign petitions, and spread awareness about issues faster than ever before. People can also vote online or get involved in local or global issues from anywhere in the world.

Conclusion

Civic participation has evolved from being limited to a small group of people to involving almost everyone. Over time, more people gained the right to vote and be involved in decisions. Today, civic participation is not just about voting, but also includes using technology, activism, and other ways of being engaged in society.

(Types of citizenship: active, participatory, digital)

Citizenship is about being a member of a country and having rights and responsibilities in that country. There are different types of citizenship.

1. Active Citizenship

Active citizenship means being involved in your community or country in meaningful ways. This includes things like voting in elections, following laws, helping others, and standing up for what's right. Active citizens care about the well-being of their community and take action to improve it, whether that's by volunteering, helping organize events, or participating in community decisions. It's about being an engaged, responsible member of society.

2. Participatory Citizenship

Participatory citizenship goes beyond just following laws and voting. It involves actively participating in decisions that affect your life and community. This could include things like attending town hall meetings, joining local groups, or campaigning for causes you care about. It's about being proactive in making sure your voice is heard, influencing policies, and taking part in actions that shape your community or country. Participatory citizens help make society better by taking an active role in shaping its future.

3. Digital Citizenship

Digital citizenship refers to how people use technology, especially the internet, in a responsible and respectful way. It includes things like staying safe online, respecting others' opinions, not spreading false information, and using technology to make a positive impact. Digital citizens use the internet to get involved in social, political, or community issues, but they do so in a way that is responsible, ethical, and respectful of others. With the rise of social media and online platforms, digital citizenship has become a key part of how we participate in the modern world.

Summary

- Active Citizenship: Involves being involved in your community, voting, and taking responsibility for society.
- Participatory Citizenship: Means actively engaging in decisions and actions that affect your community or country.
- Digital Citizenship: Involves using technology and the internet in a safe, respectful, and responsible way to get involved and make a positive impact.

(The relationship between democracy and citizenship)

1.Democracy: Democracy is a system of government where the people have the power to make decisions about how their country is run. In a democracy, citizens elect leaders, vote on laws, and have a say in important decisions. The key idea is that power belongs to the people, and they can influence how the government works.

2.Citizenship: Citizenship means being a member of a country and having rights and responsibilities within that country. Citizens have the right to vote, express opinions, and participate in activities that shape the country's future. Along with rights, citizens also have duties, like obeying laws, paying taxes, and contributing to society in positive ways.

The Relationship Between Democracy and Citizenship

In a democracy, citizenship is essential because it gives people the rights to participate in the decision-making process. Without citizenship, a person cannot fully take part in the democratic process (such as voting or running for office).

Citizenship are the ones who choose leaders, vote on important issues, and hold the government accountable. They are the foundation of democracy. Democracy works best when people are active and responsible citizens who engage in voting, community activities, and discussions about what's best for the country.

Civics and Citizenship

(Concepts of civics, citizenship, and civic engagement)

1. Civics

Civics is the study of how society works, especially in terms of government, laws, and the rights and responsibilities of citizens. It teaches us how systems like democracy and laws function, and how people can take part in their community and country. For example, civics explains how elections work, what rights we have, and how to contribute to a better society.

2. Citizenship

Citizenship is about being a member of a country or community. As a citizen, you have certain rights (like voting, freedom of speech, etc.) and responsibilities (like following laws, paying taxes, etc.). It's the status that allows you to be part of a society and have a say in how things are run. For example, as a citizen, you can vote in elections, serve on a jury, and participate in decisions that affect your country.

3. Civic Engagement

Civic engagement is when people actively participate in their community or society to make it better. This could mean voting, volunteering, attending community meetings, or even protesting for a cause you care about. It's about being involved in making decisions and taking action to help improve your society. Civic engagement can also be seen in simple acts like helping neighbors, supporting local events, or standing up for fairness.

Summary:

- Civics is the study of how governments and societies work.
- Citizenship is the status of being a member of a country with rights and duties.
- Civic Engagement is when people get involved and take action to improve their community and society.

(Foundations of modern society and citizenship)

1. Foundations of Modern Society

Modern society is built on a few key ideas and principles:

- Democracy: In modern societies, people have the right to participate in decisions that affect their lives. Democracy allows citizens to elect leaders, vote on laws, and have a say in how things are governed. This idea came from early democratic thinkers and revolutions, like the American and French Revolutions.

- Rule of Law: This means that everyone, including leaders, must follow the same laws. Laws are there to protect people's rights and keep society fair and safe. Without the rule of law, people could take advantage of others, and society would be chaotic.
- Human Rights: Modern society is based on the belief that everyone should have basic rights, like the right to life, freedom, and equality. These rights are meant to protect people from unfair treatment and ensure they are treated with respect, no matter where they come from or who they are.
- Equality and Justice: Modern societies strive to ensure that all people have equal opportunities and that justice is served fairly. Over time, societies have worked toward reducing discrimination based on race, gender, religion, and other factors.
- Social Responsibility: In modern societies, people are expected to work together to make their communities better. This includes helping others, being responsible, and contributing to society in ways that benefit everyone.

2. Foundations of Citizenship

Citizenship is the relationship between an individual and their country, and it comes with rights and responsibilities. The key elements of citizenship include:

- Rights: As a citizen, you have the right to participate in your society, such as voting, freedom of speech, and access to education, healthcare, and legal protection. These rights are often protected by law and are essential to living in a free society.
- Responsibilities: Citizenship also involves responsibilities, like following the law, paying taxes, and participating in community life. Being a good citizen means being responsible for your actions and helping improve your community and society.
- Participation: In modern societies, being a citizen means taking part in decisions that affect the country, like voting in elections, attending meetings, or speaking up for important issues. The more active and involved you are, the stronger and healthier your society becomes.

Summary

- Modern society is built on ideas like democracy, equality, human rights, and the rule of law, which help create a fair and organized way for people to live together.
- Citizenship means being a member of a country with rights like voting and freedom, and responsibilities like obeying the law and helping your community.

(Types of citizenship: active, participatory, digital)

Citizenship is about being a member of a country and having rights and responsibilities in that country. There are different types of citizenship.

1. Active Citizenship

Active citizenship means being involved in your community or country in meaningful ways. This includes things like voting in elections, following laws, helping others, and standing up for what's right. Active citizens care about the well-being of their community and take action to improve it, whether that's by volunteering, helping organize events, or participating in community decisions. It's about being an engaged, responsible member of society.

2. Participatory Citizenship

Participatory citizenship goes beyond just following laws and voting. It involves actively participating in decisions that affect your life and community. This could include things like attending town hall meetings, joining local groups, or campaigning for causes you care about. It's about being proactive in making sure your voice is heard, influencing policies, and taking part in actions that shape your community or country. Participatory citizens help make society better by taking an active role in shaping its future.

3. Digital Citizenship

Digital citizenship refers to how people use technology, especially the internet, in a responsible and respectful way. It includes things like staying safe online, respecting others' opinions, not spreading false information, and using technology to make a positive impact. Digital citizens use the internet to get involved in social, political, or community issues, but they do so in a way that is responsible, ethical, and respectful of others. With the rise of social media and online platforms, digital citizenship has become a key part of how we participate in the modern world.

Summary

- Active Citizenship: Involves being involved in your community, voting, and taking responsibility for society.
- Participatory Citizenship: Means actively engaging in decisions and actions that affect your community or country.
- Digital Citizenship: Involves using technology and the internet in a safe, respectful, and responsible way to get involved and make a positive impact.

State, government and Civil Society

(Structure and functions of government in Pakistan)

The government in Pakistan has a structure that divides responsibilities among different branches to ensure the country is governed effectively.

1. Structure of Government in Pakistan

The government of Pakistan is based on a parliamentary democracy, which means that elected representatives make decisions on behalf of the people. The government is divided into three main branches:

1. Executive Branch

The Executive is responsible for enforcing the laws and running the day-to-day affairs of the country. It includes:

- The President: The President of Pakistan is the ceremonial head of state. The President represents the country on the international stage but has limited powers compared to the Prime Minister.
- The Prime Minister: The Prime Minister is the head of the government and holds the most power in Pakistan. The Prime Minister is elected by the members of the National Assembly (the lower house of Parliament) and is responsible for leading the government, making decisions on policies, and overseeing the work of various ministries (like health, education, and defense).
- The Cabinet: The Cabinet includes the Prime Minister and other ministers who head different government departments. These ministers help manage areas like finance, foreign affairs, and interior matters. The Prime Minister and Cabinet work together to make and carry out policies.

2. Legislative Branch

The Legislative branch makes laws for the country. It is made up of two parts:

- The National Assembly: This is the lower house of Parliament, and it consists of members elected by the people through voting. The National Assembly debates and makes laws, approves budgets, and holds the government accountable.
- The Senate: This is the upper house of Parliament. The Senate represents the provinces of Pakistan and ensures that laws passed by the National Assembly are fair and balanced for all areas of the country. Senators are elected by provincial assemblies, not by the public directly.

3. Judicial Branch

The Judiciary is responsible for interpreting laws and ensuring that they are followed. It makes sure that everyone, including government officials, follows the law. Key parts of the judiciary include:

- The Supreme Court: The highest court in Pakistan. It oversees important legal decisions, ensures laws are fair, and checks if the government is acting according to the Constitution.

- Lower Courts: These include courts at the provincial and district levels, where everyday legal matters, criminal cases, and civil disputes are handled.

2. Functions of the Government in Pakistan

The government in Pakistan has several key functions to ensure the country runs smoothly:

- Making and Passing Laws

The government makes laws that govern how people live, work, and interact in society. The Parliament (National Assembly and Senate) is responsible for passing laws that improve things like education, health, security, and the economy.

- Implementing Policies

The Executive branch, led by the Prime Minister and the Cabinet, is responsible for carrying out the laws and policies made by the Parliament. This includes managing government services, like education and healthcare, and ensuring that laws are followed across the country.

- Protecting National Security

The government ensures the safety of its citizens by maintaining law and order through the police, army, and intelligence agencies. The government makes decisions on defense matters and works to keep the country safe from threats.

- Managing the Economy

The government is responsible for managing Pakistan's economy. This includes making decisions on taxes, trade, and government spending. The government creates policies to help businesses grow, provide jobs, and improve the country's overall economic health.

- Protecting Citizens' Rights

The government must ensure that citizens' rights, like freedom of speech, equality before the law, and the right to education, are protected. The Judiciary plays a key role in ensuring that laws are fair and that the government doesn't violate people's rights.

- Foreign Relations

The government handles Pakistan's relationships with other countries. This includes negotiating trade deals, forming alliances, and representing Pakistan in international organizations like the United Nations.

3. How the Government is Held Accountable

To make sure the government works for the people, there are checks and balances:

- The Parliament can hold the government accountable by questioning ministers, debating policies, and making sure the Prime Minister and Cabinet are doing their job properly.
- The Judiciary ensures that laws are applied fairly and that the government respects the Constitution.
- The Media and Civil Society also play a role in keeping the government accountable by reporting on its actions and highlighting issues that need attention.

In Summary:

- The Executive (President, Prime Minister, and Cabinet) runs the government and enforces laws.
- The Legislative (National Assembly and Senate) makes laws and checks the government's actions.
- The Judiciary (Supreme Court and lower courts) ensures laws are followed and protects citizens' rights

The relationship between democracy and civil society

1. Democracy

Democracy is a system of government where people have the power to make decisions about how they are governed. In a democracy, citizens vote to elect leaders, participate in making laws, and have freedoms like speech and assembly. It's all about giving people the right to have a say in what happens in their country.

2. Civil Society

Civil society refers to the groups, organizations, and activities that are not controlled by the government or businesses but work to improve society. These include non-governmental organizations (NGOs), community groups, trade unions, religious organizations, and activist groups. Civil society allows people to come together to express their ideas, advocate for change, and help solve social problems.

How are Democracy and Civil Society Related?

- Democracy Gives People the Power to Participate:

In a democracy, citizens have the right to voice their opinions, vote, and influence government decisions. Civil society helps people organize, express their views, and push for changes. For example, if citizens want better healthcare, civil society groups can organize campaigns or protests to raise awareness and pressure the government.

- Civil Society Strengthens Democracy:

Civil society acts as a bridge between the government and the people. It provides a space for people to discuss issues, share ideas, and get involved in politics, making democracy stronger. When people participate through civil society, it helps ensure that the government listens to the needs of its citizens.

- Accountability and Transparency:

In a democracy, civil society plays an important role in holding the government accountable. NGOs, media, and other groups can monitor the actions of the government, expose corruption, and demand transparency. This helps ensure that leaders act in the best interest of the people.

- Promoting Rights and Freedoms:

Civil society often fights for the rights and freedoms of individuals, especially marginalized groups. In a democracy, it is crucial that all citizens have their rights protected, and civil society helps protect these rights by advocating for change, such as gender equality, freedom of speech, or the rights of minorities.

- Encouraging Participation:

Civil society encourages people to actively participate in democracy, whether through voting, volunteering, or joining groups that work on social issues. It makes democracy more inclusive by giving people from all walks of life a chance to contribute.

Summary:

- Democracy gives people the power to influence government decisions through voting and participation.

- Civil Society provides the platform for people to organize, express their ideas, and push for change.

(Right to vote and importance of political participation and representation)

Right to Vote

The right to vote means that as a citizen, you have the power to choose your leaders and help decide the laws and policies that affect your life. In a democracy, voting is a key way people can participate in government.

- means: When you vote, you are picking people to represent you in the government, like presidents, lawmakers, or local officials. This gives you a voice in the decisions that shape your community and country.
- important: Voting ensures that the government is based on the will of the people. Without the right to vote, citizens would not have a way to influence decisions, and those in power could make choices without caring about the people's needs or opinions.

Importance of Political Participation

Political participation is when people actively take part in the political process. This includes things like voting, attending meetings, joining political groups, or even speaking out on issues.

- Important:
 - Influencing Decisions: Political participation ensures that the government listens to the concerns of the people. The more people participate, the better the government can reflect what citizens need and want.
 - Holding Leaders Accountable: When people are involved in politics, they help keep the government honest. Politicians are less likely to make bad decisions if they know that people are paying attention and will speak out if something is wrong.

- Empowerment: When you take part in politics, you are helping to shape the future of your country. It makes you feel like your voice matters and that you can contribute to making things better.

Importance of Political Representation

Political representation means having elected leaders who speak for you and make decisions on your behalf. These leaders are chosen by the people to represent their interests and needs.

- Important:

- Fair Representation: It ensures that different groups in society, such as workers, students, or small communities, have someone in government who understands their concerns and can speak for them.
- Equality: Good representation means everyone has a voice in government, regardless of their background or where they live. This helps make sure no one is ignored or left out.
- Balanced Decisions: When there are different types of people in government, decisions are made that consider the needs of everyone, not just one group.

Summary

- Right to vote: Gives citizens the power to choose leaders and influence government decisions.
- Political participation: Means getting involved in politics, whether by voting or other actions, to ensure the government works for everyone.
- Political representation: Ensures that elected leaders speak for and make decisions on behalf of the people.

Right and Responsibilities

(Overview of fundamental rights and liberties of citizens under Constitution of Pakistan 1973)

The Constitution of Pakistan 1973 guarantees certain fundamental rights and liberties to all citizens. These rights are meant to protect people's freedom and ensure they are treated fairly. Here's a simple overview of these rights:

1. Right to Equality

- means: Every person in Pakistan is equal before the law, no matter their race, gender, religion, or social status.
- important: This ensures that everyone is treated fairly and without discrimination.

2. Right to Life and Liberty

- means: Every citizen has the right to live freely and safely. No one can be arrested, detained, or harmed without a valid reason, and they must be treated fairly by the law.
- important: This protects individuals from unfair treatment and abuse by the government or others.

3. Right to Freedom of Speech and Expression

- means: Citizens are free to express their opinions, ideas, and beliefs, whether in writing, speaking, or other forms.
- important: It allows people to share their views, criticize the government, and promote change.

4. Right to Religion

- means: Every citizen has the right to practice their religion freely. They can worship and express their beliefs without fear of discrimination or punishment.
- important: This promotes religious freedom and allows people to follow their faith without interference.

5. Right to Privacy

- means: Everyone has the right to privacy. The government or other people cannot invade your home, your personal communications, or your personal life without a valid reason.
- important: It protects individuals from unnecessary surveillance or harassment.

6. Right to Education

- means: Citizens have the right to education, and the government is responsible for providing education to all children up to a certain age (usually 16 years old).
- important: Education helps people improve their lives and contributes to the progress of the country.

7. Right to Property

- means: Every citizen has the right to own property and use it as they see fit. No one can take away a person's property without a fair process.
- important: This protects people's belongings and ensures they can live and work peacefully.

8. Right to Fair Trial

- means: If someone is accused of a crime, they have the right to a fair trial by an independent court. This includes having a lawyer, being heard, and being judged by unbiased judges.
- important: It ensures justice is served fairly and that people are not punished without a proper legal process.

9. Right to Protection from Discrimination

- means: The Constitution prohibits discrimination based on gender, race, religion, or social status. Everyone must be treated equally.
- important: This ensures fairness and prevents unfair treatment of minority groups.

10. Right to Assembly and Association

- means: Citizens have the right to gather peacefully in public places, form groups, and express their views. For example, people can join political parties or organize peaceful protests.
- important: This promotes freedom of expression and the ability to work together to solve common problems.

Summary

The Constitution of Pakistan 1973 gives fundamental rights that protect citizens in many areas of life:

- Equality: Everyone is treated the same before the law.
- Freedom: People can speak freely, practice their religion, and live safely.
- Fairness: Everyone has the right to a fair trial and protection from discrimination.
- Privacy and Property: People's personal life and property are protected.

Civic Responsibilities and Duties

Civic responsibilities and duties refer to the things that citizens should do to help their country and community run smoothly. These are actions that go beyond just enjoying your rights—they are about being a good, active member of society.

1. Obeying the Law

- means: Every citizen must follow the laws of their country, whether it's traffic rules, paying taxes, or respecting others' rights.
- important: Following laws helps keep society organized, safe, and fair. Without laws, things would be chaotic.

2. Voting in Elections

- means: Citizens have the responsibility to vote in elections to choose leaders and make important decisions for the country.

- important: Voting gives people a voice in how the government is run and ensures that elected leaders represent the will of the people.

3. Paying Taxes

- means: Citizens are required to pay taxes on their income, property, or goods they purchase.
- important: Taxes help fund public services like education, healthcare, roads, and defense. Without taxes, the government would not have the money to provide these services.

4. Serving on a Jury

- means: If you are called to serve, citizens may be asked to participate in a jury to help decide the outcome of a court case.
- important: Serving on a jury is an important way to ensure fair trials and justice for all people.

5. Respecting the Rights of Others

- means: Every citizen has the responsibility to respect the rights and freedoms of other people.
- important: Respecting others' rights ensures peace and harmony in society and prevents conflicts.

6. Participating in the Community

- means: Citizens should help improve their communities by volunteering, helping neighbors, or contributing to local projects.
- important: Active participation in the community helps build stronger, healthier, and happier neighborhoods.

7. Defending the Country

- means: In some countries, citizens may have a duty to defend their country if it is under attack, either through military service or other means.

- Why it's important: This duty helps protect the country and ensures its safety and freedom.

8. Staying Informed and Educated

- means: Citizens should stay informed about current events, politics, and other important issues.
- important: Being informed allows citizens to make better decisions, vote wisely, and contribute to important discussions that shape society.

9. Caring for the Environment

- means: Citizens should take care of the environment by recycling, reducing waste, and protecting natural resources.
- important: Protecting the environment ensures a healthy and sustainable future for everyone.

Summary

Civic responsibilities and duties are actions that help maintain a fair, safe, and healthy society. These include:

- Obeying laws, voting, paying taxes, and serving on a jury.
- Respecting others, helping your community, and defending the country.
- Staying informed and protecting the environment.

Ethical considerations in civic engagement (accountability, non-violence, peaceful dialogue, civility.

When people get involved in civic engagement—such as voting, protesting, volunteering, or participating in community activities—they need to follow certain ethical principles to make sure their actions are fair, respectful, and helpful to society. These ethical considerations include accountability, non-violence, peaceful dialogue, and civility.

1. Accountability

- means: Accountability means being responsible for your actions and decisions, especially when you are involved in civic activities. If you are participating in a community project, protesting, or voting, you should be honest, transparent, and willing to answer for your actions.
- important: Accountability ensures that people and leaders do the right thing, act ethically, and don't misuse their power or influence. It also helps build trust in the community and the government.

2. Non-Violence

- means: Non-violence means resolving disagreements and conflicts without using force or aggression. People should express their opinions and push for change peacefully, without hurting others or damaging property.
- important: Non-violence is essential because violence often leads to harm, fear, and deeper divisions in society. Peaceful actions allow for better communication and understanding, and they help protect everyone's safety.

3. Peaceful Dialogue

- means: Peaceful dialogue means having calm, respectful conversations to discuss issues and find solutions. It's about listening to others, sharing your views without anger, and trying to understand different perspectives.
- important: Peaceful dialogue helps people understand each other, build relationships, and find common ground, even if they disagree. It is a productive way to solve problems and improve society, without causing conflict.

4. Civility

- means: Civility is about being polite, respectful, and considerate when interacting with others, even when you have different opinions or beliefs. It's about treating everyone with dignity, regardless of their background, religion, or political views.
- important: Civility helps create a positive and respectful environment where people can work together, collaborate, and solve problems. It promotes harmony and cooperation in society, and makes it easier for everyone to express themselves freely.

Summary

When people get involved in civic engagement, they should keep the following ethical principles in mind:

- Accountability: Being responsible for your actions and honest about your intentions.
- Non-violence: Resolving conflicts peacefully without causing harm.
- Peaceful Dialogue: Having respectful and calm discussions to solve problems.
- Civility: Treating others with respect and kindness, even when you disagree.

